

The Very Peculiar Case on Trial in St. Louis.

Should a Woman Know Her Own Husband.

St. Louis, Oct. 2.—The Wackerle case attracts attention in previous dispatches, still absorbing attention. A large amount of testimony, both oral and in the form of depositions, has been offered on both sides, which is almost equally divided as to the identity of the man. Several witnesses who knew Wackerle in Minnesota and elsewhere have testified positively that the man produced by the insurance company is Wm. Wackerle. Among these witnesses is John Wackerle, a brother, who seems sincerely to believe the man is what he represents himself to be. Other witnesses recognized the resemblance between this man and Wackerle.

The weight of evidence, however, was in favor of the man, and the opinion prevailed that there was some person connected with the woman's persistent reputation of him, who would probably be revealed when he was put on the stand.

That was done Saturday, and there has been a great revelation, both of feeling and opinion. He swore directly to being the husband of the plaintiff in this case, and declared a number of circumstances connected with their life, but on cross-examination he could not tell how many children he had, where they were, and how many brothers and sisters he had. He would not even tell the names of all of them. Several other things which a husband could not tell to his wife, he had been asked to tell, and he refused to do so. The direct testimony was not exactly broken down, but his cross-examination was of such a character as to lead to the belief that the man was not the husband of the woman, and the feeling is turning in favor of the woman.

He testified that he was only once in Cincinnati in 1901, whereas the woman produced for the insurance company in 1902. The theory now obtains that he is none other than Charles Wackerle, a young brother, who has not been produced in court, and concerning whom the particulars are vague.

For some years Mr. Wackerle's pension has been drawn from the government, and there are some who have watched his trial very closely who incline to the belief that a striking family likeness had enabled a fraud to be perpetrated in this connection.

The deposition of John Reimer, of Quincy, was read. The deponent declared that the photograph of the man now in court was not the same as the one which he had seen in the past. He said that there were several distinct features at variance with the photograph of the man who was being examined. He said that he had seen the man in the past, and that he had seen him in the past, and that he had seen him in the past.

The testimony of Mrs. Wackerle was then taken in rebuttal. She was closely interrogated concerning the children, of whom there were seven. She said that she had seen each of their birthplaces, their ailments, names, places of burial, etc., in marked contrast to the indirect recollection of the man claiming to be her husband.

J. S. Budd, an attorney from Minnesota, was called to testify to the character of some of the witnesses for the defense. He referred to the man as being unreliable, and said that he would have impeached Weimann, the attorney who had been produced by the insurance company, and brought out the man's past record, and that he had seen him in the past.

The evidence was all in yesterday, and a recess was taken before court commenced to address the jury. After recess the lawyers on both sides argued the case, and at their conclusion the hour was so late that the judge said he would not give the case to the jury until to-day.

STOCKS ARE STILL LOWER.

Excitement and weakness in several prominent lines.—A feeling of depression.

New York, Oct. 2.—The excitement and weakness in Louisville and Nashville continues to-day. It closed at 6 3/4 on Saturday, and soon after the opening this morning dropped to 59 and recovered to 60. The advance in Chesapeake & Ohio last week in face of a declining market occasioned surprise. A theory was advanced that Huntington had been called to secure an interest in Louisville & Nashville which would work to the advantage of Chesapeake & Ohio. Investors claim to know nothing of this, but say the stocks were low and should advance irrespective of the course of the market.

The stock market opened weak and lost further than Saturday's close. The latter for Nashville & Chattanooga, Manhattan & Albany, however, was 1 1/2. St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba 1, and Chicago & North Western 3/4 higher. During the first hour the market was very active, but decidedly weaker, and 11 o'clock prices showed a decline of 1/4 to 3/4, in which case Chicago & North Western, Lake Shore, Michigan Central, and Omaha preferred were prominent, while Louisville & Nashville, which dropped to 59 from 61 1/2 at Saturday's close, reacted to 59 1/2, and rallied to 59 3/4, and recovered to 59 1/2.

Stocks after 11 o'clock continued active but weak, and a further decline of 1/4 to 1/2, took place. Lake Erie, Western Union, Chicago & North Western, Lake Shore, Michigan Central, and Omaha preferred were prominent, while Louisville & Nashville, which dropped to 59 from 61 1/2 at Saturday's close, reacted to 59 1/2, and rallied to 59 3/4, and recovered to 59 1/2.

Mrs. Scoville's Answer Fitted. CHICAGO, Oct. 2.—Mrs. Frances M. Scoville has filed in the superior court her answer in the suit of George Scoville against Frank P. Cole, Frances M. Scoville, and others. She denies that the furniture at 592 West Monroe street belonged to her husband. The time was a present to her from friends. The chattels mortgaged to Bash she bought from Bash. The chattels mortgaged to Little she bought from her husband's, but he mortgaged them and she redeemed them. She says that, before the trial of the Chicago case, her husband had been in great trouble, and in imminent danger of arrest for reason of the non-payment of money collected by his attorney, representing all his property. She says she went to Washington, not for the love of her wife, but for the sake of her husband, and to save the family from financial ruin.

FISHING.

How President Arthur Puts in His Time at Alexandria Bay.

New York, Oct. 2.—The president is fishing at Alexandria bay, St. Lawrence river. A St. Louis dispatch says that to-day the president was taken seven miles up the river on a St. Lawrence schooner, and there got into a skiff with a friend. William Connick took another skiff. The president's party took a pickering with a great hook and minnow bait. It was wide water, and the wind piled up heavy seas. The fishermen worked over in the lee of Holdson's island, to which Capt. Westcott had gone with the schooner. He was cooking dinner there. The president sat in an arm-chair fishing and reading a book. At times his eyes were half closed. When he felt a tug at his line he would stand up and play with the fish artistically. He had a pretty fight with a big pickerel, and tired him and brought him in in three minutes. He caught three more bass and then a pickerel, but of a hook. Altogether he took eleven fish, nine bass and two pickerels. At 4 o'clock, when all were chilled to the bone, dinner was served. The president and his party ate chicken was the center dish, and chops and cold meats and baked potatoes were the main side dishes. Appropriate beverages were added to the feast. All sat around the long table on camp-stools on the rocks. The president was in especial good humor, and joked incessantly. He gave orders to the photographer, and given orders to the party in a steam launch, and got his first view of them at the table. He took three negatives to make sure, and then the president was obliged to get up and walk with his guide, and held his rifle picturesquely. The others posed near by. After that the catch of fish was spread out on a rock near the Minnie. The president took his arm-chair on the forward deck and the camera was again directed toward him. He had been as patient as only a fisherman could be, and now he stood up, saying: "If you want another, take it now." The delighted photographer, who felt that the triumph of his life had been achieved, and that his guide was a great success. The president laid down on the cushioned lockers and enjoyed a nap.

New York, Oct. 3.—George Alfred Townsend says in The Tribune: A dependent of "The Plunger," "Theo" Walton, tells me that he is worth $1,500,000, all made in the past three years on the turf and other speculations. He kept a country market tavern in Philadelphia years ago and used it as a beginning to enter politics. In a speculation to "bump" Pennsylvania railroad the lost everything, and came to New York with no other capital than was afforded by the sale of a tide-searching machine, and operations conducted by himself alone. He attributes his success to attending his table habits after a severe attack of the gout, and says that for more than two years he has never drunk a glass of wine or beer. He has again gone to Germany for the gout. Personally he is a vivacious, practical-looking man, acute but not thoughtful, and Wall Street has many such among the illiterate, rapacious worldlings.

KEWANEE AGAIN.

The Confession of the Kewanee Bank Robber Captured at Butte, Montana.

A Narrative of the Fugitive's Flight on Horseback Through the Territory.

OMAHA, Neb., Oct. 3.—Detective J. C. Maginn, of Pinkerton's force, passed through Omaha yesterday for Chicago, having in charge T. J. Drunkle, the last of the Kewanee, Illinois, bank robbers, whom he captured at Butte, Montana, after a long chase, on Sept. 28. Drunkle has been traveling under the name of Thomas Moore, and has been followed through Illinois, Iowa, and Minnesota and along the Northern Pacific to Fargo, Bismarck, Miles City, Billings, and Fort Custer. At this last mentioned point Drunkle purchased a pony for $100 from an Indian, and he traveled over the country alone with his rifle for 350 miles, being about seven days out, when on last Tuesday he landed at Butte City, Mont. He had at the beginning of the chase about forty pounds of gold, which he kept in a box and hid it in a hole in the ground. Drunkle only one day behind him. Maginn identified his handwriting at various hotel registers in Iowa, Minnesota and Dakota. Upon arriving at Butte Maginn found Drunkle's handwriting on the hotel register, and the next day arrested him at a stable where he had his horse and just as he was about to resume his wanderings. Drunkle surrendered without resistance. He had no idea that he was being followed, and he was so sure of himself, for he had been told that his companion had given him away, and therefore he labored under the impression that he was not known to be a party to the robbery. He had a hundred and fifty dollars in his pocket, and he was carrying a package of $500 in currency, and says that when he heard his partner had Kewanee, he was very much surprised. Drunkle explains his abrupt treatment of Miss Palmer, the assistant cashier, by saying that when he was trying to get her to get out of his fingers he was so sure of himself, for he had been told that his companion had given him away, and therefore he labored under the impression that he was not known to be a party to the robbery. He had a hundred and fifty dollars in his pocket, and he was carrying a package of $500 in currency, and says that when he heard his partner had Kewanee, he was very much surprised.
